Act as a professional stand-up comedian preparing for a 5-minute comedy set in English. Your audience is diverse, aged 20–40, and enjoys observational humor, relatable life experiences, and clever wordplay. Structure the routine with a strong opening joke, a central theme (e.g., dating, work-from-home life, social media, or cultural quirks), and a strong closer that ties everything together. Keep the tone witty, slightly self-deprecating, and PG-13 (light adult humor allowed, but no explicit content). Format the response as a script for performance (e.g., with timing, beats, and pauses). Maximize punchlines per minute. Let the material feel natural, as if being performed live on stage.

Stand-Up Comedy Set (5-Minute Script)
Theme: Work-From-Home Life
Tone: Witty, Self-deprecating, Relatable

(Lights up. Applause. Big smile.)

Opening (0:00 - 0:30):

Hey everyone! Good to see real humans... with real pants on!

(Pause for laughs)

You never know these days, right? Half of you probably put on jeans just for this show... and the rest are thinking, "Did I even put on pants? Or is this another Zoom dream?"

I love this post-pandemic world. Like, 2020 ruined everything... except my standards. Before COVID, if a man wanted to impress me, he needed charm, ambition... now? "Sir... do you own a chair that isn't beanbag-shaped? Marry me."

Main Body – "Work-From-Home Life" (0:30 – 4:30):

Working from home is the only job where you can be the employee, the manager, and HR... all at once.

8:59 AM? I'm the punctual employee logging in early.

9:01 AM? I'm the strict manager like, "Why are you late? You live HERE."

9:02 AM? I'm HR like, "Let's not create a toxic work environment... have a snack, buddy."

(Pause for laughs)

I've eaten more "HR-approved" snacks than I've done actual work. Every time I open Excel, my stomach thinks it's lunchtime. Excel = Hunger. It's Pavlov's spreadsheet.

And these Zoom meetings? Ohhh... the worst thing invented since Bluetooth headsets in 2008.

"Ram, you're on mute."

"Ram, your screen is frozen."

"Ram, you're showing your desktop... and there are a LOT of weird folders."

Seriously... who names a folder 'Definitely Not Porn 2'? Be honest. You know who you are.

(Pause, look around knowingly)

And don't even talk to me about "camera ON" culture. Who decided your face needs to be in 4K while you sit 2 feet from the fridge?

There's always that one coworker... bright room, nice desk, plants behind them like they live in an IKEA catalogue.

Then there's me... sitting on the bed like some overworked burrito. Just wrapped in blankets... camera off... praying nobody hears my cat throw up in the background.

Oh—and these "virtual team bonding" games? Have you played online Pictionary with engineers?

"Okay, guys, guess what this is..."

"Is that... a duck?"

"No."

"A chair?"

"Nope."

"Nope."

"Is it depression?"

"...YES! How did you know??"

Closing (4:30 – 5:00):

Honestly, working from home has made me forget how to be human. Last week I went to Starbucks... they asked my name... and I said 'You're on mute.'

(Pause for laughs)

But hey... at least now when my boss says "We're like family here"... he's right. I am working from my childhood bedroom.

So yeah... work from home life. No pants. No shame. No human contact.

Or as my grandma calls it: Marriage.
